

Welcome to the first vignette, let's get started:

Have a good look at each of these vignettes and after each picture answer the questions that arise. Think about these images in relation to your own context, your own world, your own experiences. Consider things you've seen or experienced. What are you reminded of when you see these images? Use how you feel and what you are thinking about to reflect on the questions below each image. Think critically - to understand. By going through this process, you will be confronted with both an uncertain and in some cases devastating future, but you will also get the chance to unpack how to avoid this, and how to rewrite the future. We all have the power to write our future, we just need to take the right steps and make our moves. This is an opportunity to craft a powerful story. Let us meet ATLAS

What do you see?

Who is Atlas?

How old is she? Where does she come from?

What challenges do you think she is facing?

Why are all the kids wearing masks?

What is the world like where Atlas lives?

What conversations do you think Atlas has with her friends?

What do you think the children saw along the way?

What do they have in their backpacks?

Where do you think the bus is going?

How do you think the children feel?

How do you feel about what you are seeing?

Could this really be our future?

Why did this happen?

How could we change it or stop it from happening?

What would Atlas need to do to make sure this does not happen?

What opportunities exist now that we can engage in to make sure we have healthy forests around the world?

Where is Atlas' mask?

Why do you think she is smiling?

What is she thinking about?

What are some of the possibilities you see emerging?

Do you see yourself in Atlas?
